There are times in your life when you want a no-nonsense, straightforward reading and Paula has the ability to deliver just that.

Following on from our spring magazine, we continue delving into the Major Arcana Cards in Tarot. In our first issue we covered The Fool, The Magician, The High Priestess, The Empress, The Emperor and The Hierophant. If you missed the article don't worry – you can catch up by visiting our blog:

So, now we move on to the next six cards:

The Lovers (VI)

As you might imagine one of the meanings of The Lovers card is a romantic relationship, but also it may refer to a relationship in general whether that is sexual, platonic or family in dynamic.

If The Lovers card comes up in a reading and at that time your relationship is under strain, then it is encouraging you to heal the rift and repair the bond. There is a second meaning to this card, which is regarding a choice you are faced with; it is likely the choice comes with sacrifices. For example, perhaps you have been offered a new job – with more money, but the job will have less of what you enjoy the most.

The Chariot (VII)

The Chariot is a character building card – you are probably going through a difficult time right now, it could be work related, relationship troubles or otherwise. But now is the time to be strong, grit your teeth and power through. The Chariot signifies determination and willpower under difficult circumstances. It is not suggesting you rush in, careful thought is still needed, as is being fair, although results may not be instant you can rest assured that everything will come good in the end.

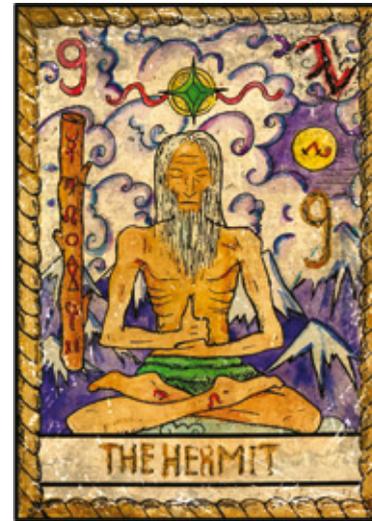

Strength (VIII)

If you are approaching what feels like an up-hill battle, this is a card you will be glad to see. It encourages you to charge ahead with the impossible, the task in hand may not turn out to be so difficult and success is yours to be had. There is no need to be pushy, but tackle things with self-belief and purpose. It will always be to your advantage to know when to plough ahead and when to hold back. Strength refers to many areas; it could mean recovering from accident or injury, strength of character, your moral code, your physicality or your emotional intelligence.

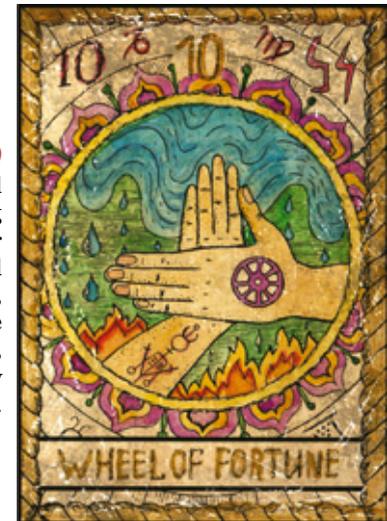

The Hermit (IX)

The Hermit card can stand for what you think it would, based on the word 'Hermit', i.e. a period of time alone, but comfortable with your solitude and a time of contemplation. Taking this time will allow you to gain balance and really get the true facts of a situation. At this time you may experience some Divine intervention, perhaps even consolation or a spiritual exercise. Whether through some sort of formal education or otherwise, it is time to educate yourself, enlightenment is needed and The Hermit wants you to shed light on a situation. Ultimately the experience will lead you to a greater understanding of your character.

The Wheel of Fortune (X)

'This too shall pass', is a great way of thinking of The Wheel of Fortune card, it is a reminder that whilst you may be going through a very difficult period, and even experiencing major change or upheaval, nothing lasts forever – everything is cyclical and an end will come. To truly know what it means to be happy, there is a thought that we first must experience troublesome times. Phases of difficulty – whether they are inner questions, emotional problems, or even material issues will eventually resolve and give way to more prosperous moments.

Justice (XI)

The Justice card may appear at a time when you are facing a legal or court matter, or may just mean that you need to behave in a way that is judicial. The card is counselling on being moderate and playing fair, no matter how difficult, it is this above board behaviour that will bring success in the end. The card is also representative of a need to live life in balance, living on the edge or at the extremes will cause you untold unhappiness. In relationships particularly, seeing things from their perspective and deciding to compromise is the best outcome for all.

What to do and what not to do, if finding love is a goal for you this year...

In our last magazine we looked at whether you were ready for love, and now we continue the series by looking at the positive steps you can take in your search for love as well as some of the things to avoid.

Things to do:

Be You!

It is important that right from the beginning of a relationship you are authentic; you want to attract a partner based on your personality and your belief systems. It is natural that we want to put our best selves forward at the beginning of a relationship, but ultimately a relationship needs to be built on trust and honesty, and you want them to fall for the 'real you'.

Love You!

It sounds corny but before embarking on a relationship you have to love yourself first, working on your own confidence, self-worth and self-esteem will lead to happiness for you. Once you are in a good place it is much easier to attract a partner that will find it easier to fall for you. After all you do not want to just settle for any person just to fill a void in your life.

Positivity!

Try to make looking for love a by-product of having a fun-filled life. Fill your life with family, friends, work, past-times and so on and stay positive about your future. Searching for love should not be turned into a quest that is all consuming and exhausting; it should just be something that happens along the way as part of your already fulfilled life.

Things not to do:

Don't Force It!

When you meet someone, try to take things slow and let the relationship develop naturally and see where it takes you. Don't start every relationship with the expectation that they must be your soul-mate or 'the one', the process will likely end in disaster with the relationship crumbling under the expectation before things have really got started.

Desperation!

Don't settle for a relationship that is less than you deserve. When you meet the right person it is highly likely that they won't meet every one of your criteria (that little list that everyone has – tall, good looking, prospects etc. etc.). But it is okay to have standards and it is okay to be choosy – take your time and go with your gut instinct, don't let fear or desperation override things.

Don't Give Up!

It can feel very disheartening if love doesn't seem to be coming your way, perhaps you have been on some blind dates, been set up by your friends, tried internet dating but to no avail. Well don't give up as very often when you stop focusing so hard on things – that's just when something happens.

The Summer Solstice is nearly here, and it will mark the important relationship with the sun and our planet. In the UK the longest day of the year begins with sunrise at 4.52am on 21st June 2017.

Solstice History

Ancient cultures saw the summer solstice as significant and as such they celebrated accordingly. Fire was used in many ways to signify the power of the sun; nature and crops also played a large part in the festivities with thanks given for abundance and prayers said for the future, love rituals were also common, with dances signifying strength and courage that were also thought to attract a mate.

Festivities Now

For many people the summer solstice still holds significant meaning, and as such they may travel to ancient and religious sites such as Stonehenge to take part in celebrations that focus on Mother Earth, nature, the sun and new beginnings.

Even if you do not go to a special event, it is still a great time to take stock of life, reflect on your spiritual side and see how you want to move forward.

Embrace

In times gone by the summer solstice would have marked a time of change in nature as well as for mankind. You can use this time to become more at one with the rhythms of nature and to be more receptive to vibrational changes in your own life landscape.

Let the solstice inspire you to open up to new opportunities. Instead of backing away from change, why not embrace any possibilities that are coming your way?

Take the time to look at your life – have you met your goals, are you happy, have you let go of any dreams or desires?

Spirituality

Those with psychic abilities are likely to find it easier to embrace the powerful energies that surround the solstice event. If you are struggling to prepare, then you might want to think about meditation. The sun is awe inspiring at this time of year – go outside and meditate, and let the sun's rays shine down on you whilst you embrace and absorb all of the positive energy you can from the solstice, and then harness it for any changes you want in your life.
